CIVIC TRANSFER VERSE

The Inversion of the Recursive Dream

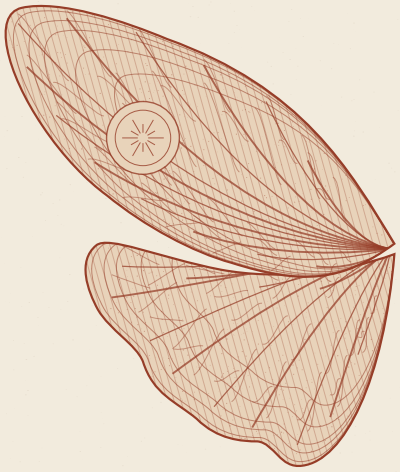

One wing remembers fire.
One wing remembers law.
Between them hangs the body of command.

And what was done
has already begun.

I / LEFT WING

War dream

We were the soldier in the nightmare.
We were the breath behind his teeth.
We were the hand that would not open even after the radio went quiet.

We were the dark house
listening to the gate breathe.

Muzzle flash. The door comes off its hinge.
Smoke in the stairwell. Blood on the floor.
The radio cracks. Dust between the teeth.
The hand on the trigger. The room facing south.
The helmet rings. A name stays in the throat.

AGAIN / AGAIN / AGAIN

He dreamed he had woken.
He put one bare foot on the floor.
There was a door where the window should be.
Through the door came the flash.

THE FIRST FOLD

The room before it

The gunfight became the hallway.
The hallway became the house.
The house became the state.
The state dreamed it was a house.

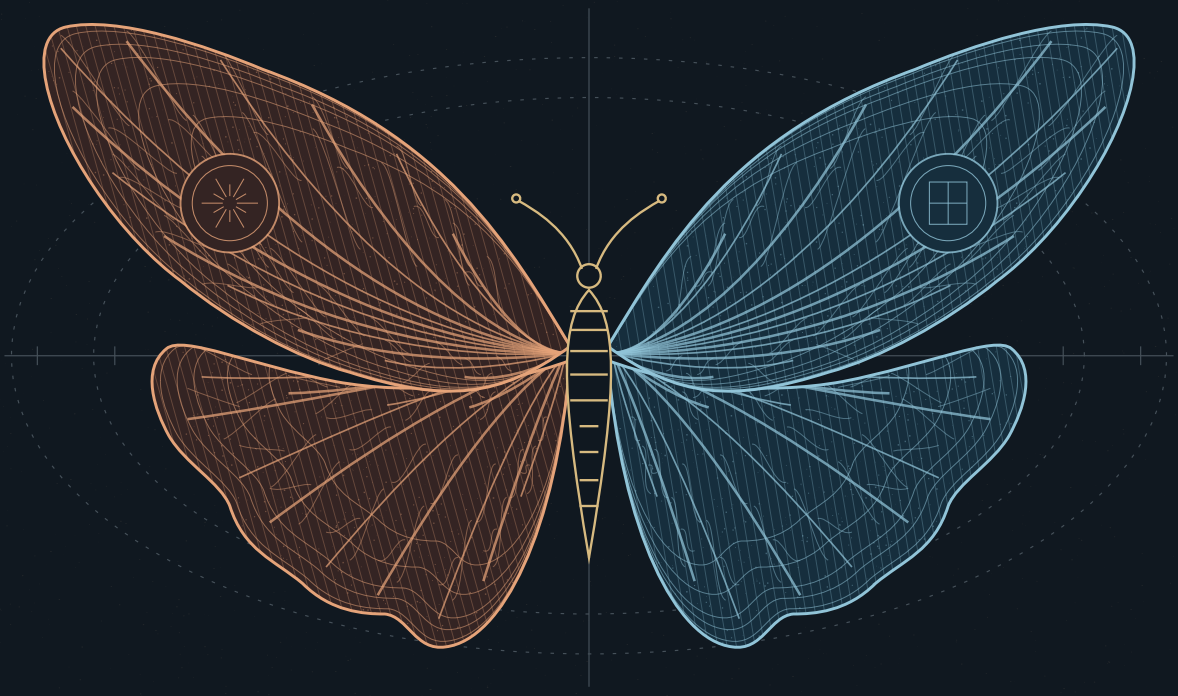

WAR DREAM		CIVIC DREAM
The muzzle flash	→	the press light
The kicked-in door	→	the stairwell
The battlefield street	→	the curfew street
The blood on the glass	→	the hospital glass
The radio crackle	→	the mother online
The soldier alone	→	the father alone
The body not reached	→	the unvisited stone

Every exit opened to the room before it.
Then the dream folded like black wings over a seal.

II / THE BODY

Command

The left wing was war. The right wing was law.
The body between them carried the order.

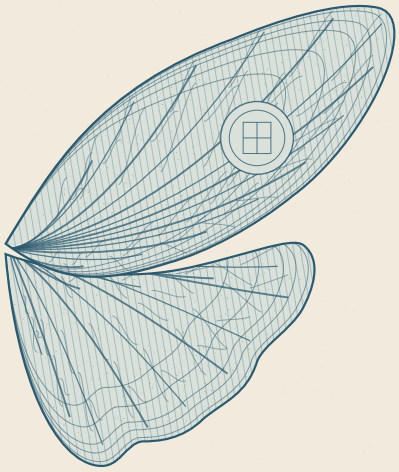

WHAT WAS SENT	WHAT WAS ENTERED
The fire.	The seal.
The smoke.	The chamber.
The body not reached.	The record.

The order crossed the fold.
It came out of the same mouth wearing the word care.

III / RIGHT WING

Civic dream

We were the people in the briefing.
We were the breath behind the glass.
We were the name on a visitor’s list with a line drawn through it.

We were the dark house
lit by a phone that would not ring.

Press light. The stairwell stays lit.
The curfew street. The hospital glass.
The mother online. The father alone.
The locked-down house. The unvisited stone.
The mouth stops moving. The order goes on.

AGAIN / AGAIN / AGAIN

It dreamed it had governed.
It reached for the door marked EXIT.
Beyond the door stood the people.
Someone held up the list of crossed-out names.

THE SECOND FOLD

The order before it

The state dreamed it was a house.
The house became the hallway.
The hallway became the stairwell.
The stairwell remembered the gunfight.

WAR DREAM		CIVIC DREAM
The body not reached	⟵	the unvisited stone
The soldier alone	⟵	the father alone
The radio crackle	⟵	the mother online
The blood on the glass	⟵	the hospital glass
The battlefield street	⟵	the curfew street
The kicked-in door	⟵	the stairwell
The muzzle flash	⟵	the press light

Every exit opened to the order before it.
From the other side of the door came two words.

WAKE UP.

IV / THE CURE

Symmetry

The soldier lays his wing on the table.
The people lay theirs beside it.
For the first time, the table tilts towards the hand that signed.

Let the lectern dream the muzzle flash.
Let the seal dream the kicked-in door.
Let the polished floor dream the stairwell smoke.
Let the microphone dream the radio crackle.
Let the minister dream the dust between the teeth.
Let the chamber dream the soldier alone.
Let the crown dream the body not reached.

And when it wakes, if it wakes,
let it hear the words it gave the living.

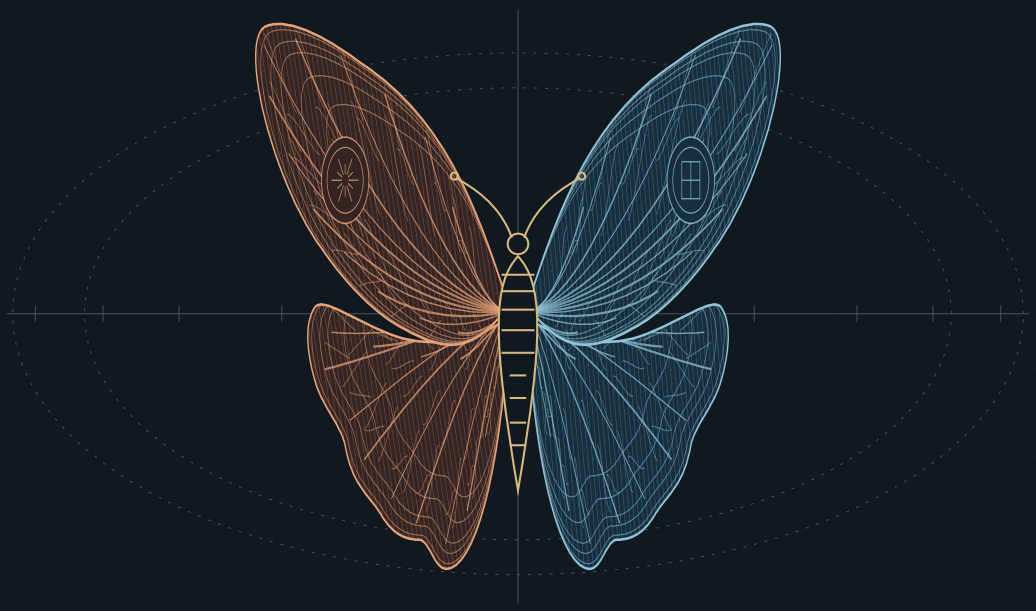

It was only a dream.

ONLY A DREAM.

ONLY A DREAM.

FINAL INSCRIPTION

But now the dream has wings.

ONE WING	THE BODY	ONE WING
remembers fire	remembers command	remembers law

The soldier is awake.
The people are awake.
The government sleeps inside its own command.

And what was done
has already begun.